

The Dog Attacking the Milk Boy

Edvard Munch

1935-1938

Pencil

Wove paper. 122 × 223 × 0,09 mm (h × b × t)

For some years around 1920, Munch had a dispute going with his neighbour Gunnerud, whose watchdog had a rather broad idea of where the boundaries of his master's property ran. This fierce dog - as Munch saw him - became the object of a large number of rather exaggerated drawings and lithographs. For more, see the essay "The Punic War that Raged at Nedre Ullern".
